

STACY JEWELL

Survivor, Activist and Artist

Stacy Jewell brings with her over 14 years of community outreach in the Anti-Trafficking movement. Jewell is the creator & host of Jewell Survivor City Radio Podcast, a podcast for survivors by survivors of human trafficking. Stacy is also co-founder of SurvivorUniverse.com a digital membership magazine geared to uplifting survivors worldwide.. Stacy is not only an advocate, she has lived the very atrocity she speaks out against. Raised in the D.C. metropolitan area, at the age of 19, she was abducted and forced into the dark world of sex trafficking. After being held captive for almost two years, she was liberated from the violence and the psychological abuse of the sex industry. She has since dedicated her life to removing the stigma of shame surrounding those who have survived sex trafficking and the commercial sex industry.

SPECIAL GUEST

Her passion and unique voice resonate across the globe, drawing audiences and unifying the cause. Stacy is the writer and director behind the award-winning play, 7 Layers Captive. This critically acclaimed production premiered at The Kennedy Center to sold out audiences before going international to sold out shows at Amsterdam's University of the performing arts.

Jewell has help raised millions of dollars for fundraisers and spoken for hundreds of nonprofits and campaigns including the MLB's Strike Out Slavery campaign, organizations such as The National Center of Missing and Exploited Children, the FBI and state level human trafficking task forces, The Boys & Girls Clubs of America, the State Department, The Department of Justice and countless universities around the world.
